

El Dorado

(words and music by Alexander Sands)

As long as there is light there will be shadow
As long as there are shadows there is night
And when the night comes falling we will travel
Travel on into the morning light

Where we go you know no one can follow
That path is made for you to walk alone
I begged I bought I stole and I borrowed
Got nothin' left except this rag and bone

Searching for the land of El Dorado
And may one day, I finally find my home
May one day, I finally reach my home

As long as there is love there will be heartache
And what turns out can never be foreseen
Then once again you find yourself mistaken
Chained, to the weight of false belief

Where you go you know no one can follow
Cept' the undertaker riding on your trail
Well I might not make it to tomorrow-
But at least I know my aim would never fail

We're searching for the land of El Dorado
May the stars above shine my way home
So that one day, no longer will I roam

As long as there are weapons there is danger
And a long as there is danger there is fear
So brother don't cut me down with your heart so full of anger
And I promise you I will always be sincere

Where you go you know I can't follow
We parted ways a long long time ago
So leave behind your burdens and your sorrows
And turn your gaze unto the open road

Searching for the land of El Dorado
May one day I finally find my home
May one day I finally reach my home
May the winds of fortune carry me home
But will this fortune ever save my soul?
